MDG 101 is a series of on-line self-paced teaching modules that gives nurses, case managers, disability management specialists, rehabilitation counselors and their medical consultants a fundamental resource in disability prevention and management. (As used here, the term “disability” refers to medically-related difficulties performing everyday activities and work.) It educates participants in the return-to-work process on the essentials of case management, while also building their confidence in applying the industry-leading information toolset MDGuidelines.

Medical treatment, carpal tunnel syndrome.

The training material is available in several different configurations, depending upon the needs of the individual clinician, employer, or sponsoring organization. In addition to identifying best-practice techniques in returning employees to work, the course demonstrates the interpretation of published guidelines to establish realistic expectations and goals that dramatically improve outcomes and quality of care.

Even experienced users of disability duration guidelines often miss opportunities to apply this information properly. Recently released innovative features and tools make it even easier to employ this resource in complicated cases with multi-stakeholder communications. Learn these important principles and earn valuable continuing education credits at the same time.
